

Xiaohu Sieghard JIANG started his PhD study in December 2014 and is currently a PhD candidate at the University of Macau. He conducted his master study at the Sichuan International Studies University and his master thesis (2009) investigated English-Chinese diplomatic interpreting in light of André Lefevere's manipulation theory. His PhD project focuses on the British-German confluence of sentimental literature during the eighteenth-century. Sponsored by OeAD, he spent one year at the Department of German, University of Vienna, for his doctoral research. He worked as translator and published four translation books (English to Chinese) in mainland China, and has published over thirty Chinese short stories and essays in Macau.
